MARKET ANALYSIS

INDUSTRY CHALLENGES

It is essential to identify the different industry challenges Plaas faces to later identify which gaps to bridge and what actions to avoid. Plaas is facing the following current industry challenges:

- Maintaining Plaas's product reliability and stability in their functioning, in other terms, their quality while potentially scaling up the business may be hard to be overcome in the near future.
- Plaas may encounter difficulties when penetrating the Dutch market, specifically sectors that are not yet digitized or invested in technology.
- The Netherlands's regulations are not strict enough for demand for Gafky to significantly increase.
- The Netherlands's municipality sorting system(s) may be too advanced, thus, leaving the gap that Plaas is intended to fill.
- Another inhibitor for market penetration is the possible lack of education of private consumers (individuals, households), most of them may not be willing to pay a high price for, in their perspective, substitute their current bin with eventually the same thing (This, Plaas can use as their owner's advantage to begin a substantial movement towards merging environmentally friendly practices (recycling and high-tech UK and machine learning).
- Companies' CSR strategies and development in the ESG compliance department may not be representative of their actual decisions and purchases. In other words, many companies are greenwashing the market, thus, companies may seem in need or want of products such as Gafky, yet, are not willing to invest in such products.
- Fast industry innovation shortly may leave Plaas lacking behind unless it continuously and proactively becomes aware of the market's innovations, especially in the technology field, and improves and updates its AI and other technology systems to conserve its competitive advantage.

STADIUMS

Customer profile

Stadiums represent one of the most promising potential client groups (especially football, rugby and ice hockey) since (i) the mass of people attending sports events is large and creates large amount of waste, (ii) in the stadium atmosphere and with typical volatility, the traditional line is ineffective and (iii) the waste cannot be kept from materials that can be potentially exchanged for money. According to Eurostadium, the waste is 3 kg per average and consists of PET bottles where the average rate is 1,7 per person, in the case of plastic cups 0,5 per person and 0,4 aluminium cans per person.

There are a number of stadiums in the region (by football stadium in Barcelona with capacity near six thousand visitors and 34 of them in the Netherlands with capacity near 5 thousand visitors). The level of environment- or innovation- friendliness differs a lot amongst them, but there exists organisations such as Green Sports Alliance grouping green and smart stadiums across the globe and organising visitors, tourists etc.

Goal definition

In regard of stadiums where there are large potential clients rather than large number of smaller clients, the taken approach of contacting them needs to emphasise quality over quantity. Since this goal is not unlimited it can happen that without an enhancement of current collabing strategy and it's response / conversion into all the potential clients will be contacted without any outcome. Since the managers offer massive number of events, the PL&D strategy needs to be consistent. Therefore it needs to be focused on three areas (i) persuasiveness, (ii) professional look and (iii) clarity.

The second goal is get engaged and deal deeper into the stadium industry. Stadiums have already established contacts their current waste management providers and switching them (single pilot testing) is connected with high uncertainty. The enhancement in contacting strategy will certainly increase the credibility of PL&D solutions, however still the largest impact has the personally contacting
